UQAM strikers harassed by administration

Day care sit-in enters third day

by andrew phillips

McGill student parents entered the third day of their occupation of the eighth floor common room of the Leacock building this morning, as part of their campaign to force the Administration to establish day care services on campus for all students, staff, and local residents.

About 35 parents, children, and student supporters took over the common room early Tuesday morning, in an occupation that according to the organizers "will be in effect until the administration meets our demands or the police come to arrest us."

Members of the McGill Baby Care Co-op decided on the action over the weekend, after the Administration closed down the Peel Street centre they had been using until Friday. Sympathetic students and faculty have joined the Co-op in forming the Alliance for Child Care, which is demanding that:

- the administration take the necessary steps towards providing adequate space and facilities for immediate day care needs, and
- that Doctors Bell and Frost personally meet with representatives of the group to negotiate these demands.

Members of the Alliance are circulating a petition on campus which describes day care as "a right rather than a privilege". After two days the petition has been signed by over 2000 people, including many faculty members and university workers. The Administration has so far made no public response to the group's actions.

Organizers of the sit-in are urging members of the McGill community to help them by joining the occupation, signing the petition, or sending funds and needed supplies, especially baby food: "We want to emphasize that people should come and actively aid us."

There has been no antagonism between the occupiers and those working in the Leacock building. Many have signed the petition, and the sit-in has received "total support from everyone, especially the secretaries and porters."

The occupied common room has been turned into an ad hoc day care centre, with parents and students helping to take care of the children. Meanwhile, Alliance members remain determined not to give up until their demands are met.

The commercial press was notable by its absence at a press conference held yesterday afternoon at the University Settlement by members of the Comité d'Organisation Provisoire des Etudiants (COPE), the student strike committee at the Université du Québec à Montréal.

The students, in reporting on the current situation, charged that the administration has repeatedly sent police to interfere with the picket lines since the beginning of the strike last Friday, and that the administration has also intimidated professors and employees.

They quoted from an administrative council resolution adopted Tuesday and transmitted to the media which declares that "The Université du Québec à Montréal is presently open, which implies that administrative staff, professors and employees are required to be at their posts in order to assume their normal service to the university."

On Tuesday the UQAM administrative council adopted a resolution in which it declared, for the benefit of the media, that "the Université du Québec à Montréal is presently open, which means that the administrative staff, professors and employees are bound to be at their posts in order to assume their normal services to the university."

A spokesman for COPE also pointed out that on Tuesday a few student representatives met with Rector Dorais, but that the talks were fruitless. The administration held to its initial position of dealing with students individually concerning the payment of fees, and completely disregarded the students' demands.

The students, however, are determined to continue the strike and are working out new tactics. The next step is a demonstration, to be held tonight at 6 pm, organized in conjunction with students from the Université de Montréal.

COPE is at the same time extending its information campaign by holding teach-ins, one of which will take place today at McGill.

Food war in Chile

SANTIAGO DE CHILE (CUPI)—While no Chilean party, left or right, has officially released an election program for the March parliamentary balloting, events have placed the contest in the economic field.

After the failure of the October lockout by owners across the country, businessmen have silently been piling up vast quantities of vital merchandise.

The country began last month to feel the effects of the economic sabotage, which the rightwing media announced many months ago as the consequence of the "Marxist management".

Items such as cooking oil, canned goods, sugar, and powdered milk became scarce, with the hardest hit sector being the dwellers in the large, makeshift settlements surrounding Santiago. These communities have few stores, most of them small.

The black market thrived, with prices at least four times higher than the official ceilings. Then the opposition dailies began to carry scare pictures of people waiting in line to shop, along with furious protests from "housewives".

"El Mercurio", the principal rightist paper, closely linked with American corporate interests (its New York-dwelling publisher is on the board of Pepsi Cola), predicted in a January 9 editorial: "If the scarcity and the black market continue, a large scale election failure of the Marxist parties is inevitable."

The reactionary propaganda seemed to outdistance that of the government by seizing its main election argument: that the right practices economic sabotage, and promotes speculation and black marketeering.

During the second week in January, however, Chile's economy minister, Fernando Flores, announced measures to hit hard at the rightist campaign. The US-run Voice of America carried a lengthy report accusing Unidad Popular, president Salvador Allende's party, of implanting food rationing.

In fact, the measures Flores announced are contributing to a better distribution of food products in the sectors hardest hit by hoarding, through control of supplies by the grassroots organizations. The neighbouring bodies must guarantee that the products sent to the merchants are sold openly and at ceiling prices.

At the same time, the authorities have begun a dragnet against hoarders, with scandalous results the reactionary media prefer to ignore.

Vast amounts of sugar turned up in a warehouse. The owner was the brother of one of the parliamentary candidates for the ultra-right National Party, one of the promoters of the shortage scare campaign.

Every day, inspectors investigate denunciations made by the neighborhood bodies of local stores, and tons of food are discovered and placed on sale at once. In one week of struggle against hoarding, the results have been sufficient to shake the right's campaign.

On Jan. 18, "El Mercurio", temporarily leaving the food front, carried a front page photo of a line of people buying sheets, in what appears to be a switch to the consumer soft-goods line. It was also reported that the local residents of the well-to-do Las Condes section in Santiago are organizing their own "supply boards" in what looks like a replica of the government actions.

Meanwhile, 25 percent of the Chuquicamata copper workers reportedly walked off the job for a day over scarcities. The Christian Democrats control part of the miners' union there.

ERRATUM

In the article entitled "Unions Split by Raiding" in the January 30 issue of the Daily it was erroneously stated that the FNEQ is the Quebec National Students' Federation. In fact, the FNEQ is the Quebec National Teachers' Federation, of which the McGill Faculty Union and other unions of university teachers are a part. The FNEQ (and the MFU) are, as was stated in the article, affiliated to the Confederation of National Trade Unions. There is a Quebec Student Front (FEQ) which was formed this spring. Through our mistakes we learn.
